This long established custom is supposed to derive its title from a monkish procession, taking place annually to the Mount, at which time consecrated salt was sold to the spectators. The present spectacle partakes of a military array: the greater part of the youths are habited in uniforms, and the senior scholars have the dresses of a marshal colonel, espiain, bestemant, and ensign: the latter of whom bears the college flag, with the motto "Pres More et Moute," which he waves with much form before the departure of the procession from the college, and on the summit of Manyaness-Orrics.—On Friday night

THE DESOLATION OF SCIO.

The first place that the long gathering tempest fell upon, was the island of Scio, and every hody knew with what violance it fell. The ecenes of horor that were placed of there, for the space of six weeks, have been made familiar to the world; and; compled with the more recent destruction of spars, the fail of Scie will long be held as the vary perfection of atsocity, keyond which it would be difficult aven for fends to proceed. By day I tward the chrisks of the flesing and the circuse of the parameter, the supplicating voices of women, children, and old men, dying away in the short, treculous cry of dealth's agony. Day after day I heard lie irregular discharge of munkety own as the irregular discharge of munkety of the same of statility houses, as their marble walls fell to the sarth; I saw the smoke extend in dense mane of statily is smoken as their marble walls fell to the sarth; I saw the smoke extend in dense mane of statility and of oranges and citrons, and from the basquets of the lavoits music.

But by night, how fearful was the spectacle The murderer reposed from his bloody labours; a deathly silence reigned, broken occasionally by the loud crackling of the consuming fire, the fall of a building, or the savage cry of some Asiatic sentine. The flamewrose high from tower and grove, lighting up the destruction they were making. They darted in broad, red masses across the channel that divides the Island from the main, and reflected on the black sides and lefty summit of Cape Karabourson. Then I saw consuming the beautiful city, the fairest, the politect of all the Levant, where, at different periods of my life, I had spent many a happy day; then I saw the rawge of the destruction they were making. They darted in broad, red masses across the channel that divides the Island from the main the summan of the core of the constant of the orange tree, the circon and the already that we week the summan of the core of the constant of the constant of the constant of the constant of the core of the constant of the con holes, and an odious black shake lay coiled on the very after stone! I could have wept to see such changes.

Before I proceed to finish my adventures, there is one particular story of the massacre of Sciowhich I must tell you, because it is not generally known, and because I can answer for its authenticity, having seen the villains before the scoul and flush of anger were off their countenances, and having heard the recital ast fell, without one expression of relenting or remorse, from the lips of the murderers. A party of about a dozen Turks had taken, among other female captives, ayoung lady of extreme beauty, and could not agree to whose lot she should fall, each being inflamed with a desire of possessing so fair a prize, and determined not to relinquish her to another.—After a long and violent altercation they grew formus, and were drawing their arms to fight among themselves, when one of them proposed that, as they could not all obtain her, nobody should, and that, to prevent further quarrelling, they should shoot her. This being unanimously agreed to, the barbarians went into the room should, and that, to prevent their unanimous they should shoot her. This being unanimous they should shoot her bechasing went into the ro agreed to, the barbarians went into the root where the poor creature was, already well nig dead with fear; each of them discharged his per tol at her, and left her a disfigured corpus.

One of the individuals summoned, having taken the usual oath to answer questions as to his competency, declared he had conscientious scruples, and if he were on the jury he could not find a verdict, the consequence of which would be, a legal sentence of death; as he did not believe that civil tribunals had any right, under any circumstances, to take the tite of a human being. He was informed by the Court, that the duty of jurous was not to act as legislators, but simply to determine from the cridence before them whether or not a fact had transpired, which

PHILADELPHIA:

PRIDAY EVENING, AUGUST 7, 1929.

Mr. ALLEY, whose name figures almost daily, and often in more places than one, in the law and often in more places than one, in the law reports of the Times. We are tempted to give a specimen of his rhetorick—a speech in defence of a printwitter, whose neighbors had precured his indictment for nuisance. The caricatures, with which he decorated his shop window, attracted such a rabble that no one could squeeze through except at the risk of having his coat torn off his back, or his pocket picked by the thieves that make part of every crowd in Loxson. One of the witnesses was a jeweller, who, however, was obliged to admit that he tried to attract as many gazers as possible to his own shop window. Another was a tobacconist, who always permitted purchasers to light their segars in his shop; which Mr. ALLEY thought a horriin his shop; which Mr. ALLEY thought a horri-ble abomination. Another was an apothecary, whose business had not suffered as much as that of his neighbors. People that wanted physic, he said, must have it; so his customers got in by the back door.

The chairman of the Sessions was decidedly opinion that a nuisance was proved; having years. The jury, without hesitation, returned erdict of not guilty.

Mr. Alley said:—"He was satisfied his learn ed friend (Mr. Adolphus) had misunderstood the hon, chairman, when he supposed he had inti-mated an opinion upon the case before he heard nated an opinion upon the case before he heard pt. He (Mr. Alley) was quite confident he should be able to convince that learned person and the jury, that there was no pretence for the procecution. He did not care who differed from him, whether judge or lawyer; he would rield his judgment to no man, for without vanity he could say that he was as well versed in the he could say that he was as well versed in the criminal law of this land as any lawyer at the bar; ay, or any judge that ever sat upon the bench. Inferior in mental ability he might be, but in Asiow-ledge on this subject he yielded to ne man. He declared then, most solemnly, that in his opinion the defundants were no more guilty of a nuisance than any other tindesmen is the metropolis who asposed his goods in his shop window for sale. If they were guilty of a nuisance, so was the writness who aspeared against them to-day and witness who appeared against them to-day, and who stated that he had exhibited his trinkets in his window to attract and arrest the attention of the passers by ;-nay, still more guilty was the other witness, the tobacconist, who had not only exposed these same caricatures, painted on snuff-box lids in his own window, but actually kept a lighted candle in his shop, for the express purpose of enabling his customers to light their cigars, and puff their filthy tobacco smoke into the months of every decent person they met.— He (Mr. Alley) had dined in that neighbourhood yesterday evening, and when passing through this very court, on his way to his chamthrough this very court, on his way to his cham-bers, a well-dressed blackguard brushed by him, with a lighted cigar in his mouth, and just when passing he looked into his (Mr. Alley's) face, and—wheugh—puffed his nesty tobacco smoke into his mouth and down his throat (great laughter); and were it not that his stomach had heen just hefers well foreigned. laughter); and were it not that his stomace had been just before well fortified, it would have made him quite sick, for he never could bear the smoke of tobacco. (Continued laughter.) The shopkeeper, therefore, who furnished the means to ill-bred fellows of annoying people in this way, was, in his (Mr. Alley's) opinion, much nearer to committing a nuisance than the defen-dant, who only exhibited the productions of their industry and their talents in their window absurdity of calling this a nuisance, merely because people chose to stop outside to look at the prints; and asked why the confectioners' shops were not indicted at Christmas time, when every body knew that there were crowds outside all of thom, (and there were an eminent one in this very court,) to admire the kings and queens on the Twelfth cakes. As well might poor Verrey have been indicted for a nuisance, in Regent street, because his daughter, a beautiful Swise girl, served in his shop, and attracted a crowd outside the window, which was ultimately the cause of the poor girl's death. The magistrates interfored as far as they could on that occasion, but all they could do was to order the street to be cleared, and any person who was guilty of riotous conduct to be brought before them. They never dreamed, however, of indicting the shop as a nuisance. The learned coursel next referred to the crowds of carriages which blocked up the public streets while Mr. Mathews was performing, and also outside Drury-lane and Covent-garden theatres, and yet in any of those cases it was never supposed that there was any ground to prefer an indictment for nuisance.-After some further observations and illustration in support of his argument, Mr. Alley called upon the jury to defeat so dangerous an experi-ment as this, the effect of which would be, if they were to exection it by their rardiet, to pre-vent every small shopkeeper from exhibiting his goods in his window, and thereby deprive him of the only means he had of competing with those wealthy tradesmen who could rely upon their extensive connections, and who would thus become monopolists. Before he sat down, he said, he must complain of Mr. Adolphus in having gone out of his way to impute to one of the de-fendants that he had kept a billiard-table. He plain of Mr. Adolphus in having did not know whether it was true or not; if it was, he (Mr. Alley) would not associate with the party who was guilty of it; but this he did know, that there was not the slightest evidence affered to show that he ever had been concern-d in any way with a billiard-table, and there-part of the rail-way the locometive engine travels and delivers the wagens at the head of another inclined plane of five hundred yards in length, having an inclination of two feet thirtyfive-hundredths in a chain. The wagens are passed down this plain in a similar manner to the first, in one minute and three-quarters. At The experiments commenced by the passing of a train of four carriages, each loaded with 3 1-2 tons of coal, down the first inclined plane, an operation which highly gratified the spectators from its extreme simplicity. The locomotive ongine, named the Agenoria, was then attached to eight carriages, carrying 560 passengers, the weight of the whole being 41 tone 18 cwt., and the whole preceeded, attended by a band of music, from the feet of the first inclined plane of music, from the feet of the first extended plane of musi SHIRE canal. The experiment here noticed was scended the inclined plane; these were attached to the engine with eight carringes of passengers, the weight being 13f tons 10 hundred weight. The engine then started with its load of 131 tons, and proceeded to the head of the second inclined plane, and the distance, 1 7-2 mile, was performed in thirty-three minutes, being at the rate of nearly $ 1-2 miles per hour. On arriving rate of nearly 3 1-2 miles per hour. On arriving at the head of the inclined plane, the carriages loaded with coals descended the plane. The engine next returned with the eight carriages, loaded with passengers, at the rate of six miles per hour; and on reaching the foot of the first inclined plane, all the carriages were diseagaged from the engine, except the tender carriage, with from the engine, except the tender carriage, with twenty persons on it. The engine was again started, and proceeded with the tender and twenty pessengers about a mile on the read, per forming the trip at the rate of eleven miles per hour, although not more than half of the engine power was laid on. This concluded the experipower was laist on. This concludes the asperi-ments; and, we are happy to add, that not the slightest accident occurred, although an immeasure crowd was collected about the carriages while proceeding, many of whom, by hanging to them, very much impeded the progress of the engine in the second trip with the twenty carriages; indeed, it was computed, that in addition to the 920 passengers in the carriages, three hundred there were dragged along. The number of perecomotive engine in this part of the country was the engine-carriage during its first trip. J. H. Foley, Esq., M. P. for Droitwich, Colonel Forey, Eq., M. P. for Droitwich, Colonel Fetherstone, and many gentlemen from the neighbourhood were present. There was also a brilliant assemblage of ladies, by whom one of the carriages, fitted up in an appropriate meaning the carriages, fitted up in an appropriate manner, was entirely filled. The engine was made under the superintendence of Mr. J. U. Rastrick, at Stourbridge, who bestowed no ordinary pains in its construction, so as to obviate the noise and smoke which those of original make, and used in the north of England, are subject to; and it is said he has successed beyond what could have been expected. The noise occasioned by the secape of the steam, when discharged from the cybinder, is wholly done away with, and the smoke is scarcely more than that produced by more than that produced by an ordinary chimney. The safety-valve is much improved by a spring, so as to prevent the es-cape of steam from vibrations of the engine; and another safety-valve is added, which is an tirely inaccessible to the engine-man, thus ren dering the engine infallibly secure from explosion. Another very ingenious contrivance is in-troduced, by which the engine oils its bearings on the carriage at every revolution of the wheels.

ANOTHER FIRE.—Last evening at 9 o'clock a fire was discovered in a large rickety eld wooden building, situated in the space between William and Pine streets, lately threwn open by the extension of Cedar street. In five minutes the whole pile was enveloped in one column of flame. The heat was intense: while the firemen were making their arrangements, which occupied some minutes, the fire began to take on the rear of the large stores fronting on Pine street, and considerable anxiety was felt by the owners of property on Pearl street. The stores on Pine street had metal gutters, and the window shutters were covered with iron. No. 70, owned by Robert Lenox, Esq. and occupied by Messrs. Snelling & Baxter, was badly damaged and the goods much injured. Messrs. S. & B. we understand are fully insured. No. 48, belonging to the same owner, and occupied by Stone & Otis, was scorched, but not materially injured. No. 70 1-3, occupied by P. W. Engs, was considerably damaged in the rear. The old building where the destruction counsenced, had in it a steam engine, carpenter's shop, and something like a blacksmith's shop, and was occupied by Mr. Thomas Bloomer.

Cant. Morgan, of the brig Drome, arrived last Capt. Morgan, of the brig Drome, arrived las night from Havana, reports that at the time of his sailing it was known that another expedition of 4000 troops was fitting out, to sail in two or three weeks from Havana, Trinidad de Cuba, and Porto Rico,—destination same as the last. Captain Jones, of the brig Lucy, was reported to have died of fever on the 28d July.

MOST respectfully informs the public that he has opened a BOOTMAKER'S SHOP, at No. 16 South Fifth street, 3 doors north of Chesnut street, where he will attend from 7 in the morning till 6 in the afternoon. He has associated with him, his brother, DAVID MAR-SHALL, who will attend at the old stand, No. 119 South Third street, opposite the Massion House Hotel. David Marshell's steedy habits, and talents as a workman, will easure punctuality and excellence in the work.

After long application and experience, Samuel Mar-shall has succeeded in discovering a method of Boot and Shoe cutting on markematical principles, which cuables him to promise much more perfect work than can be made without his method, and he ventures to as-sure the public, that at either of his shops, in Fifth or Third street, they may rely on being fifted with boots and stores, constructed with much more precision and exactitude than obserwhere.

Third street, they may rely on being fitted with hoots and sinces, constructed with much more precision and exact finds than absenders.
